LONG DRINKS

"A martini forgives. A gin & tonic never does!"

LONG DRINKS

Well, this is a topic that can be discussed for hours. What really is the difference between a cocktail and a long drink? First off, the long drink doesn't exist, at least, in English speaking countries. Simply put, a long drink is a "short drink" mixed with a soft drink.

COCKTAILS

"Life is like a cocktail.

Sometimes sweet, sometimes bitter, but overall, enjoyable."

COCKTAILS WITH ALCOHOL

The first alcoholic drinks to resemble modern day cocktails were mixed in the 17th century, during British colonial times. However, it was not until later that the term cocktail was widely used. This term likely originated in the 18th century, when after a cockfight the tail feathers of the defeated combatant were taken and the victory was celebrated with a drink.

BRANDY

Brandy is distilled from the so-called fortified wine which consists of fermented wine, mixed with wine distillate. It is usually distilled twice and stored in oak barrels. In order to maintain the appropriate quality of a brand, distillates of different origins and aging stages are blended together and stored again at the end of the maturation period.

COGNAC

A brandy named after the small French town of Cognac. A brandy which has made the town so well known, so world famous, that it is even recognized above Paris in the most remote corners of the earth. Cognac is only grown in a specific region in the southwest of France, called Charente. Only specific grape varieties may be used in the production of Cognac and these include: Ugni Blanc, Colambard & Folle Blanche. The distillation process is carried out according to the traditional Alambic method. Cognac must be allowed to age at least 3 years in the cask.

GIN

Gin was derived from the Dutch word "Genever". Originally, Genever was medicine, which was used by the English on the battlefields of the Netherlands - as a medicine. During the reign of Wilhem III of Oranien, the English king brought Genever to his lands. The word "Genever", too difficult for the English to pronounce, was shortened to Gin. Gin is distilled from corn, with juniper berry extracts and various other botanicals.

RUM

Rum was first produced by the European explorers in the "New World" in 1630. Although at that time it was often referred to as "Kill-Devil" or "Rhum". The present day name for rum probably came from the latin word for sugar, "Saccherum". As of 1660, the name Rum became widely used. By 1687, the British Royal Navy declared that each sailor should receive a pint (about ½ Litre) of rum as part of their daily ration.

WHISKY/WHISKEY

Between the 9th and 13th centuries, Irish monks brought not only Christianity but also their knowledge of distillation to Scotland. The first historical mention of Uisgue Beatha (translated as "water of life" - later "usky" and finally „whiskey“) was found in some transaction records from 1294, which the monk John Cor used for the subsequent production of the first whiskey-like drink.

VODKA

The typical countries that come to mind when one thinks of vodka are Russia and Poland. What remains unclear though, is in which of these two countries this "little water" actually originated. It was only after World War II that immigrants introduced vodka to other countries. Vodka must be made from a product of agricultural origin and not, to the ubiquitous opinion, of potatoes.

WINE & CHAMPAGNE

“White wine is what you drink, before red wine.”

WHITE WINE

White wine is made from white wine grapes. In addition to the types of grapes used, white wine also differs in its production process from red wine. The first written records of white wine date back to ancient times.

RED WINE

The best guess for the origin of red wine is that it was first produced about 8000 years ago, but wine-like products were produced and consumed by indigenous people even earlier. In the days of Christ, red wine took on a deep religious significance. One fundamental characteristic of red wine, is that it is made from blue wine grapes.

SPARKLING WINE & CHAMPAGNE

Sparkling wine was already known in Roman times but, in the 17th century, the Benedictine monk Dom Pérignon shone some new light on the bubbly beverage and developed the type of sparkling wine that has come to be known as present day Champagne. Since the 1930s, his name has become synonymous with Champagne - under the manufacturer Moët & Chandon.

VERMOUTH

Vermouth is a wine flavored with spices and herbs containing approximately 15 to 18 percent alcohol with relatively high sugar content. Vermouth owes its name to wormwood (Artemisia absinthium), which clearly defines its taste through its bitter aroma. Vermouth is drunk as an aperitif, is part of many cocktails and is also used to refine food.

BEER

Did you know, that the old Bavarian word for beer was “oil”? In fact, in english and scandinavian languages it is still sometimes referred to in this way. For example, the Munich produced beer Paulaner used to be called, “holy-father-oil”.

DRAUGHT BEER

The best way to store beer, and keep it from going bad without the use of preservatives, is the barrel. It prevents the beer from being directly exposed to sunlight...its biggest enemy. Not to mention that beer tastes the best when it's freshly poured from the tap. Before tapping, it is best to store the beer at 6 to 8 ° C, and preferably let it settle for at least two days so that it does not foam too much when pouring.

HOT DRINKS

Coffee stimulates enjoyment and discovery. The production of coffee is complex, and processing and roasting the beans is an art. However, the production of coffee is only half of the story. The rest comes with its enjoyment. The art of seduction is the same, whether the “little black” is drunk straight or mixed with cream, milk or foam.

SNACKS

"If you're not supposed to eat at night, then why is there a light in the fridge?"

CURRYWURST

On a rainy evening in September 1949, four years after the end of the Second World War, Herta Heuwer stood in her old food truck in the American occupied quarter of Berlin. "Not a child, not a person around. So out of boredom, I mixed spices with tomato paste and it tasted great" explained the business woman. 10 years later, Heuwer patented her sauce recipe at the Munich patent office under the patent number 721319. The name "Chillup" stood for the combination of chilli and ketchup.

PIZZA

The baked pizza should not have its origin in Italy, but from the same people who claim the invention of gyros. The Greeks, or at that time the Etruscans, were said to have been the first to bake a flatbread made from flour, water and salt on stones by the open fire. Dough pancakes are called "pita" at this time, from which the word pizza develops over time.

WIENER

Despite their name, “Wiener Wurstchen” did not really originate in Vienna. They were actually first created by the butcher Johann Georg Lahner in Frankfurt in the early 19th century, and were extremely popular at that time. Lahner later moved to Vienna with his sausage recipe, where he modified it slightly. It didn’t take long before his new sausages became a hit in the new city.
